The NGS 2022 Family History Conference in Sacramento, California, is less than a year away—which means it’s a good time to start planning your genealogy research strategy. California is a gold mine of resources for family genealogists and historians.

Our American Mosaic is the theme of the Conference, focusing on the constantly evolving influx of people from many heritages who have given America a distinctive population. Conference registration opens in December, and hotel reservations will begin in the fall. See <https://conference.ngsgenealogy.org> in August.

In addition to learning from Conference presentations by genealogy experts, attendees will have opportunities to explore the Sacramento area. Included on the agenda are a visit to the Marshall Gold Discovery Center, a walking tour of the Capitol Mall, a stroll through Old Town Sacramento, a winery tour and lunch in the Amador Valley, and more. For information about these tours, see <https://conference.ngsgenealogy.org/wp-content/uploads/pdf/2022-NGS-Family-History-Conference-Brochure.pdf>.

While planning your visit to the 2022 NGS Family History Conference, think about adding some time for a side trip to San Francisco—a mere ninety minutes west of Sacramento. Below is a list of Sacramento and San Francisco area repositories popular with researchers. Because some places may require an appointment, use the websites to prepare for your visit.

The California Genealogical Society is in the process of preparing research guides for surrounding counties, which will be released later this year. 🌳

Kathleen O'Donnell Beitiks is a fourth-generation Californian. Her paternal Irish ancestors immigrated to California in the 1850s and ran a boarding house in Grass Valley for gold miners. It's safe to say her ancestors did not strike it rich—otherwise Kathleen would be living in a mansion today. Currently the volunteer coordinator for the California Genealogical Society, Kathleen is also the publicity chair for the Local Host Committee of the NGS 2022 Family History Conference.
