In 1903 American interest in the country's past ran high. For several national hereditary organizations headquartered in Washington, D.C., patriotism was a centerpiece. Their officials included registrars and others whose interests also embraced genealogy, and membership required tracing family lineages. In April 1903 the monthly Historical Bulletin, which served as the official news organ for several of the groups (see figure 1) published a call for the formation of a genealogical society. Dr. Albert C. Peale, registrar of the Society of Colonial Wars and assistant registrar of the National Society Sons of the American Revolution, had suggested “the formation of a local genealogical society” [emphasis added]; the Bulletin's publisher, Newton Leon Collamer, announced an organizational meeting at his home in Washington, D.C., and suggested that “such an organization might eventually assume even a National scope.”

On 24 April 1903, six individuals met to discuss a plan: Dr. Joseph G. B. Bulloch, Newton L. and Gertrude Collamer, Alfred Barbour Dent, Eugenia Washington Moncure, and Ruth M. Griswold Pealer. Shortly afterwards, an organizing committee mailed to genealogists throughout the United States a Prospectus for the American Genealogical Association. Its principal aims, as shown in figure 2 included

- publishing records to benefit researchers at a distance;
- ensuring access to records;
- creating a “card index bureau” or “clearinghouse” to facilitate the exchange of information; and
- establishing a library.

Seven months later, on 14 November, the twenty-four founding members drafted a constitution. Rather than calling themselves the American Genealogical Association (see the Prospectus), they chose to call themselves the National Genealogical Society. They adopted bylaws and elected officers in December, and the National Genealogical Society (NGS) was born. Just after Christmas the Washington (D.C.) Evening Star announced: “Genealogical Society Organization Formed of Searchers After Missing Links.”

For one hundred years the National Genealogical Society has evolved from those modest origins in the nation’s capital to a national organization. Its programs still reflect—and now exceed—the goals defined in the 1903 Prospectus. Following is a brief overview of the society’s development over the past century—in its organization and in its programs.

Newton Leon Collamer

ORGANIZATION

A NATIONAL SOCIETY

From the start, NGS founders intended to establish a national society. Although the organization was based in Washington, more than one-third of the charter members lived outside the area. Nonresidents voted by mail to elect officers and to set governance policy. Of the six vice presidents serving in 1909, three were from other parts of the country, and the next year, five were. In 1912 the appointment of state vice presidents for New York, Maryland, Ohio, Maine, Georgia, and Minnesota further broadened the national base. When the concept of state vice presidents was later abandoned, the organization looked for other ways to maintain its national character, and references to that concern appear in correspondence and business minutes for decades. The 1912 bylaws revision that called for a “State President for each State wherein membership

Prospectus of the American Genealogical Association*

Issued May 1, 1903, by the Committee on Prospectus appointed at an informal meeting held in Washington, D. C., April 24, 1903.

With all its organizations the National Capital has none appealing to genealogists although the latter are plentiful here. The annual conventions and other meetings of patriotic and historic associations draw hither hundreds interested in ancestry while thousands know of the genealogical data to be had exclusively in Washington but cannot easily gain access to it when they come or have no ready channel for securing it by correspondence. There are especially valuable records available here which have never been published and which, through suitable influence, might be obtained and put in print; and in that form they would be of great practical use to genealogists throughout the country.

Prompted by the belief that organization by those having common aims and needs would be of mutual benefit and might secure access to or copies of official records where individual effort would not, we therefore propose the formation of a National genealogical society with headquarters in this city. At a recent informal meeting for an interchange of opinions the following was evolved as our general and composite idea, although nothing will be decided on finally until every suggestion in response to the Prospectus shall have been considered.

Name, American Genealogical Association; object, material assistance to genealogists who are members; membership, resident and corresponding; dues, $1 a year at first; government by a Board of local members who can meet; medium, a publication to be issued six or at least four times a year; free to members; the card index bureau or "clearing house" idea to be established and carried out; library and permanent quarters unnecessary now; heraldry to be a feature if members so decide.

Suggestions are solicited from all. Those interested in an organization formed on substantially this basis are invited to remit $1 and be enrolled as charter members; their suggestions shall have special consideration and the policy finally adopted will conform as nearly as possible with the popular option. The Historical Bulletin will serve as a medium for publicity for the present, in addition to which the friends of the movement are requested to circulate this Prospectus (with their endorsement of approval) in letters to their genealogical correspondents. Additional copies may be had by applying to the Temporary Treasurer.

In 1946 leaders had focused on the “national” issue. According to Milton Rubincam, then president of NGS:

The National, State, District, Territorial, and Foreign Genealogists, in addition to the other members of the Society, are in a position to make this a truly national genealogical society…. The impression has gotten abroad (in some quarters) that we are a national society only in the sense that we are headquartered in the nation’s capital. This, of course, is wholly untrue; we are not the genealogical society for the District of Columbia but for the United States at large.¹¹

MEMBERSHIP

Membership has always been one measure of the society’s national character. Before the end of 1903, there were forty-eight charter members, among them thirty from the capital area, seventeen from other parts of the United States, and one from Canada.¹² Membership cost $1.00 and fell into three classes: resident (those residing in the District of Columbia and vicinity), nonresident or corresponding (those outside the Washington area), and honorary.¹³ From the beginning, members came from beyond Washington. Five years after the society’s founding, half of its members lived in the capital area, with twenty-eight resident members, twenty-nine corresponding members, and fifteen honorary members.¹⁴

Perhaps because many charter members also belonged to lineage or “patriotic” societies,¹⁵ the early NGS membership structure drew heavily upon those organizational models. Each application had a “proposer” and “seconder”; forms grew to resemble lineage applications, eventually providing space for five-generation genealogies.¹⁶ In 1944 information such as parents’ date and place of birth and names of children replaced the genealogical data,¹⁷ but sponsors remained on the forms until about 1971.

¹¹ “Functions of the National and State Genealogists of the Society,” by Milton Rubincam, president, received at the 5 October 1946 meeting, 1946 folder, Business, Board/Council, RG 5, NGS Archives.

¹⁵ At least eleven of the twenty-three women were members of the DAR in 1903; nine of the twenty-six male charter members had belonged to the National Society Sons of the American Revolution (SAR) in 1902; and the first five NGS presidents were either SAR or DAR members. See Louis H. Cornish, A National Register of the Society Sons of the American Revolution (New York: Andrew H. Kellogg, 1902), 249, 251, 261, 263, 272, 277, 281, 443, 444, 972. No single published source exists for the DAR members. Information came from a variety of sources, including the published DAR lineage books, application records, and other data provided by the DAR Historian General’s Office, Washington, D.C.

After an enthusiastic start, interest in the society waned. A special meeting in March 1908 would determine whether “because of apparent lack of interest . . . the Society shall not voluntarily disband. . . .” Instead, it survived and grew. Its national makeup remained intact, and by 1944 only eight of the forty-five new members that year were Washington area residents. In 1948 the society had 458 members from forty-four states, England, and Argentina. Only 123 (27 per cent) were from the capital area. Membership first reached 1,000 in 1957, and by 31 December 1982 had crossed the 5,000 mark. In 1991 membership topped 10,000 and in 1998 it was over 17,000. In about fifteen years membership had tripled. Today members hail from the fifty states and twenty-one other countries.

In his December 1970 “President’s Letter” in the NGS Quarterly, Dr. Kenn Stryker-Rodda echoed his predecessors as he promoted a national agenda. Noting “fewer than a third of our members live in Washington and its environs,” he urged, “Let us all work together to keep this organization NATIONAL in scope.”

GOVERNANCE

After its inception, the society’s first order of business was to secure legal status. Probably following the example set by the DAR, which received a congressional charter in 1896, the society also applied for a charter. When it was not granted, the society, on 16 June 1904, incorporated in the District of Columbia; in 1991 incorporation was changed to the Commonwealth of Virginia.

From the outset, the society’s governing body enjoyed some diverse geographical representation. Over the years its forty-two presidents have hailed from at least twenty states, although until recently presidents resided on the Atlantic seaboard. Only three presidents are known to have been born in the District of Columbia. One was the first NGS president, Charles H. Campbell, a Civil War veteran. Five NGS presidents were born in Pennsylvania. Other states contributed between one and four presidents. Broad representation became increasingly important to assure that concerns and priorities in different areas of the country received appropriate attention.

One of the society’s major accomplishments in the last two decades has been its determined move toward a national governing body. In 1981 regional members joined 23 See Appendix C for information on NGS presidents. Around the time of the Society’s 50th anniversary, John Nichols compiled biographical sketches of NGS presidents, but they were not published in the society’s history. Pictures of former presidents, however, were on display at the anniversary Jubilee Conference. In 1957 biographical questionnaires were sent to former presidents, but only a few returned questionnaires are in the NGS Archives. Milton Rubincam assembled additional material that incorporated the questionnaire answers. The material frequently mentions other services to NGS, heritage from an immigrant ancestor, lists of books or articles published, and additional material of a general nature. Material found in the course of compiling this current history has also been placed in the appropriate folders in Bios, Board/Council, RG 5, NGS Archives.

the governing council and some occasionally attended the monthly meetings. Not until 1997–98, however, were changes made that reflected the society’s national character. A board of directors responsible for setting policy and for oversight replaced the more “operational” council. Quarterly board meetings replaced monthly gatherings so directors throughout the country could participate. (At the same time a newly established executive committee began making decisions needed between meetings.) NGS began reimbursing directors’ travel and lodging costs for attendance at board functions. Although some of these moves had been considered as early as 1978, bylaw revisions in 1997 made these and other changes a reality. NGS now boasts national leadership that reflects the makeup of its membership.

SEAL AND INSIGNIA

The early constitution provided for both a seal and insignia—important items to our founders. The original seal depicted an oak tree, but it was changed in 1911 to an eagle. Many genealogists probably recognize this seal because it has been used on numerous NGS publications over the years, including the NGS Quarterly. The seal’s eagle is another reminder of the patriotic spirit of the early NGS members. The insignia, with three acorns, is less known. In recent years the insignia has seldom been used except as a gold pin or lapel tac given to fellows and past presidents. A few members of long standing have in their possession a similar rhodium or sterling silver pin or lapel tac that was sold in 1975 to generate funds for the 75th anniversary activities.

25 Changes to the original seal were made in the 1911 constitution. It is described as one and 13/16 of an inch in diameter, consisting of a conventional eagle, below which is a ribbon or scroll containing the motto, “Non Nobis Solum,” [not for ourselves alone] and above a similar ribbon with the words, “THE NATIONAL GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY,” all contained within two or more concentric circles. The date of the founding of the Society, “1903,” is figured between the eagle’s claws.

26 The insignia design is a shield in blue, white, and red enamel, surrounded by a ribbon of gold bearing the name, “NATIONAL GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY,” in blue [called black in the constitutions of 1931 and 1948] letters. In heraldic terms the blazon of the shield is “Argent, three acorns gules, within a bordure azure.”

27 This pin uses the insignia’s center of three acorns, without any wording or coloring. The gold pin, with a gavel attachment, is given to past presidents.

28 “Our Insignia,” The National Genealogical Society Newsletter 1 (1975): 2. This first issue had no name, volume or page number.
Other insignia can be found on early stationery. The example below is from stationery used in 1905 when Lucia E. Blount was president.\(^{29}\) There are no records indicating how long this insignia version was used.

STAFF

Mirroring the above governance modifications, over time the day-to-day operations moved largely from the hands of volunteers to professional staff. From the beginning, volunteers had taken responsibility for much of the organization’s work. For years the need for professional staff was noted in council minutes,\(^{30}\) but not until 1962 was a full-time executive secretary hired. Several years later part-time employees were added to the payroll, and by 1982 NGS had three full-time and four part-time employees.\(^{31}\) The staff increased somewhat over the years, but has remained small relative to the membership base.

HEADQUARTERS

One thread running through society minutes is the need for space. Society meetings were first held in members’ homes. In the 1930s members gathered at the Young Women’s Christian Association (YWCA) and later at the Mount Pleasant Branch Library, both in Washington, D.C. By 1939 NGS was considering such alternatives as renting space or partnering with another organization to share space.\(^{32}\) Neither happened and the society’s need for space grew.

By 1948, the annual president’s report of Milton Rubincam acknowledged:

> We have talked constantly of our great dream—a headquarters building. An examination of back issues of the Quarterly reveals that for years appeal after appeal was published for assistance in acquiring a building for our own use, either to occupy it alone or to share it with another organization. During my first decade in the Society the Presidents have coped with the problem, but their efforts have not met with success. It seems to me that we should have enough pride in our Society to want to have a building that we can point to as the Headquarters of the National Genealogical Society. . . . It is a sad truth that many splendid manuscript collections have not been donated to our Library because we have no place in which to make them available to the general public.

\(^{29}\) Lucia Eames Blount file, Bios, Board/Council, RG 5, NGS Archives.

\(^{30}\) Only small stipends of less than $300 a year were paid to several staff members.

\(^{31}\) Until a 1992 bylaws change, the NGS Newsletter editor and librarian, both staff members, and the National Genealogical Society Quarterly editors, who are contractors, were automatically members of the Council. To end any possible conflict of interest, these Council positions were eliminated in 1992.

\(^{32}\) Transcript of suggestions regarding a permanent headquarters, 21 January 1939, 1939 folder, Business, Board/Council, RG 5, NGS Archives.
By possessing a headquarters building, the Society would be in a position to render a greater service to out-of-town as well as to Washington members. 33

In 1951 President Herbert F. Seversmith summed up the mood:

The National Genealogical Society has enjoyed a half-century of progressively developing genealogical activity. . . . It has all the attributes of a well-established successful organization except one. It has no home. . . . Practically every element, justifying the immediate securing of a building, is present. . . . Your proponent proposes, therefore, that we initiate the actual procedures to obtain a building. 34

The situation continued to be pressing, as noted in 1953 by President Seversmith:

The lack of a headquarters is really beginning to hurt us. It is more of an embarrassment to us in 1953 than it was in 1948, and your then President characterized the situation with strength and vigor. Mr. Rubincam stated at that time that it was regrettable to reflect that the national organization is forced to limp along in borrowed quarters and to have our library scattered all over Washington in the attics and cellars of our members, with only a small portion of our published and unpublished collections on our bookshelves in our present meeting place. 35

A year later the same theme was repeated.

Space is cramped here in our headquarters room. Much of our material is still housed in the attics and cellars of our members. Many genealogical papers which would ordinarily be given to us, are not presented to the Society because of our inability to care properly for them. We should have a home of our own, where we can hold meetings and protect our collections. . . ." 36

The breakthrough came in 1955 when Mrs. Christian Heurich, widow of a Washington brewer, donated their family home on New Hampshire Avenue in Washington to the Columbia Historical Society, retaining a life-interest in the property. After her death the following year the Columbia Historical Society moved in. The historical society’s vice president, Meredith B. Colket, proposed sharing the building with NGS and other organizations. NGS joined the historical society (which was a requirement for maintaining headquarters in the building) and soon had space in the Christian Heurich Memorial Mansion and, from 1964—1985, in the carriage house behind the mansion. 37 The society finally had a space to call its own—albeit rented. Before long, however, the space was inadequate, 38 and prior to the June 1985 lease expiration, the search for a headquarters began anew.

At that time the Ball family of Northern Virginia was interested in selling Glebe House in Arlington County, which was listed on the Virginia Historic Landmarks Register (1971) and the National Register of Historic Places (1972). Preston C. Caruthers, an Arlington County developer, acquired the property and wanted to build townhouses on part of it. As the Balls wanted the house to go to a “worthy group,” an agreement was reached with NGS.\textsuperscript{39} Caruthers rewired Glebe House and painted it inside and out.\textsuperscript{40} In keeping with the historical property requirements, he also constructed on the grounds a “carriage house” to contain the library collection. The society moved into Glebe House in March 1985. At a ceremony on 13 December 1986, attended by descendants of Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Ball Sr., Caruthers presented NGS a deed of gift for the historic house. For eighteen years it has been the home of the National Genealogical Society.\textsuperscript{41} constructed in 1775 for the rector of the parish, who served both Christ Church in Alexandria and the Falls Church. The original house was destroyed by fire in 1795 and by 1820 a new house had been constructed on its foundations. The second house burned in 1840. Glebe House is believed to have been built in the 1850s, with the rectangular portion probably reconstructed first and the octagonal wing added later. Nineteenth-century owners of the house included John Peter Van Ness, mayor of the District of Columbia, who had formerly been a congressman from New York, and Caleb Cushing, ambassador to Spain, who had previously been a congressman from Massachusetts, first American minister to China, brigadier general in the Mexican War, and attorney general to the United States.

PROGRAMS

Over the years NGS programs have been developed to educate the genealogical community and to otherwise serve its needs. Education has long been one of the society’s primary goals and, therefore, the main objective of several programs. Lectures, conferences, courses, and most publications were specifically designed to be “instructive”; other programs were intended to educate more indirectly. Additional offerings—described as “member services”—augment and strengthen the society’s educational mission.

EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMS

Lectures

For more than twenty years NGS sponsored Saturday lectures. In 1975, when gatherings outgrew space in the solarium at the Heurich mansion, the National Archives allowed the society to meet in its auditorium, requiring only that an Archives staff member be present. From 1977 to 1989, when the lecture program was discontinued, some eighty presentations were taped and made available for loan to members. To those were later added tapes of Computer Interest Group lectures and others made during the 1970s. Taking advantage of new technologies, in February 2001 NGS instituted online lectures or chats and, in 2003, audio-teleconferences.

Conferences and Seminars

In 1978 NGS sponsored the Diamond Jubilee Conference in Silver Spring, Maryland. Three years later the society initiated the Conference in the States—a series of annual conferences intended primarily as an educational program. Since 1981 NGS has held a yearly national conference. The twenty-three meetings, held in different parts of the country and designed to address the interests of a diverse membership, have attracted large audiences. In recent years attendance has usually been from 1,500 to 2,000 people.

The conference format and execution was fine-tuned each year and became so successful that it was frequently copied by other societies. Conferences evolved from limited subject matter to multiple tracks, with numerous lecture choices. For many, this was their first opportunity to hear and talk with well-known genealogists. The chance to view and purchase a wide range of genealogical materials was also appreciated. As an organization, NGS benefited from the opportunity to work with local societies and become better acquainted with the NGS membership.

In 1998 the society began organizing one-day seminars in areas where larger conferences were not feasible. In addition, in 1985 the society began maintaining a list of genealogical speakers, which benefited institutional and individual members mutually. It evolved, by 1992, into the published NGS Speakers Directory.

Courses

In May 1981, when NGS launched an important home-study instructional module, American Genealogy: A Basic Course, the society strengthened its role as a leader in genealogical education. Introduction to Genealogy: An Online Course, added in 1999, provided another curriculum option. A second online course, Using Census Records in Genealogical Research, was designed in two modules. Federal Population Census Schedules 1790–1930 was first offered in 2002 and Special Federal Census Schedules in 2003. Recognized mainstays in the field of genealogical education, all of the courses continue to provide quality instruction to researchers and family historians.

In 1996 NGS collaborated with the Smithsonian Institution on a seven-week genealogy course through their continuing education program, Campus on the Mall. It was well received by the 130 participants who attended the weekly evening sessions and reached an audience outside normal genealogy circles.

Scholarly and Educational Publications

The society’s publications have fulfilled dual functions of education and communication—always serving national, and even international, audiences. By any measure, the scholarly quarterly journal and some of the special publications meet “educational” criteria. The National Genealogical Society Quarterly, established in 1912, has evolved steadily as a quality publication teaching beginners and advanced researchers through peer-reviewed case studies and articles about methodology and resources. Its readers and authors have traditionally come from all parts of the United States and from several other countries, and its contents reflect issues from those places as well. Fourteen editors and countless authors have contributed to its longstanding reputation as a premier genealogical journal.

A series of “special publications,” inaugurated in 1933, expanded the society’s educational materials. Most originated as Quarterly articles, but commissioned titles and independent works are also represented. Particularly reflecting the society’s national scope is its ongoing “states series,” in which individual publications cover research methodology and resources for specific states. Another notable publication with enduring national value is the Index of Revolutionary War Pension Applications, first published by the society in 1966 as Special Publication No. 32. It was revised and enlarged as Special Publication No. 40 in 1976. In 1986 the society broadened its service to members by selling, in addition to its own publications, other recommended titles. A new venture in 2000 commissioned works from selected authors to be published by Rutledge Hill Press in cooperation with NGS. Three years later the first titles became available in mainstream bookstores.

A more specialized educational venture in 2000 built on the society’s longstanding commitment to fostering young peoples’ interest in family history. The society secured a $25,000 grant from Ancestry.com to develop and publish an educational comic book, Hunting for your Heritage. It is particularly well suited for classroom use with younger age groups. In the last decade the society also published two teacher guides and sponsored workshops for those teaching genealogy to young people.

Although education remains the central focus of the publications program, sales also produce much-needed revenue. By 1961 special publication sales were the second most important source of income after membership dues.

Standards

Another important way the society teaches is by advocating guidelines for the field. The standards established by the society are now acknowledged nationally as benchmarks for sound and ethical genealogical practice. The following standards were published in 1997:

- Standards for Sound Genealogical Research;
- Standards for Using Records Repositories and Libraries; and
- Standards for Use of Technology in Genealogical Research.

Two additional standards were released in 2000:

- Standards for Sharing Information with Others;
- Guidelines for Publishing Web Pages on the Internet; and
- Guidelines for Genealogical Self-Improvement and Growth.

SERVICES TO MEMBERS

News Publications

In a more practical vein, NGS publications have provided a vehicle for communicating with members across the country. The first official news organ was Collamer’s Historical Bulletin, which ceased publication in 1906. The society also published twelve Official Leaflets. The last Leaflet or Historical Pamphlet, as it was also called, was published in 1911, and the following year The National Genealogical Society Quarterly replaced it.\(^6^6\)

The first issue of the National Genealogical Society Newsletter was published in the winter of 1975.\(^6^7\) Its name was changed to the NGS Newsletter in 1987, then to the NGS Newsmagazine in 2000, and finally to the current NGS NewsMagazine in 2003. In 1985 the first issue of the Computer Interest Group Digest was published. The Digest became a special section within the Newsletter in 1998.\(^6^8\) In 2002, a popular biweekly electronic newsletter, UpFront, became the newest communications channel. It allows the society to keep members around the country and the world up to date on news and developments within the organization and the field.\(^6^9\)

Library and Research Services

An early and ongoing challenge was to serve the society’s national membership using its Washington volunteer base. Toward that end, the library sponsored as one of its early projects a surname exchange. A list was first published in 1956.\(^7^0\) After 1966 members expanded the list by submitting Members’ Ancestor Charts. By 1994 more than 66,000 family group sheets from members formed the collection (now known as the “MAC” file). Local volunteers indexed the husband and wife on each sheet, which was then searchable by mail request or personal visit. In 1997 volunteers around the country began creating an every-name index that will be posted on the NGS Web site.\(^7^1\)

Another long-standing program is the collection of Bible records. For years members have submitted both photocopies of Bibles and typewritten transcripts.\(^7^2\) An index compiled by volunteers, is now searchable on the NGS Web site and copies are available from the NGS Member Resource Center.\(^7^3\)

The society’s book collection, however, was the library’s primary focus. In early years, the books were kept in members’ homes. In 1940 the collection was moved to the home of Max E. Hoyt for temporary cataloguing. To fund the purchase of sixty-one used bookshelf units with glass fronts, memorials were sold and brass plaques were affixed to the bookshelves. The bookshelves were then placed in the Mt. Pleasant Branch Library where meetings were held.\(^7^4\) When NGS moved to the Heurich Mansion the library was first in the former billiard room,\(^7^5\) but following renovation of the Heurich carriage house, it was moved to this building. At Glebe House, the library was again housed in a building constructed to resemble a carriage house.

The library loan service, which allowed members to borrow most of the collection by mail, began in 1964. Book catalogs were converted to an electronic system in 1996 and placed online two years later, facilitating the loan process. In 1986, when the library collection was installed at Glebe House, a members-only research service administered by volunteers was first offered. For a modest fee volunteers searched the collection for answers to members' research requests. This service to out-of-town members also provided a small income for the society.

Not long after the move to Glebe House, the library space was filled to capacity, and by 1993 a committee was studying long-term needs. Over the next years decisions were taken to reshape the library program. In 1999 the board considered purchasing a larger building to accommodate expansion of staff and library. By 2001 that and other options had been rejected. The decision was made to transfer the book-loan collection to the St. Louis County Public Library in Missouri and to continue all lending privileges from there. Some reference works, rare books, and the manuscript collection remained at Glebe House. The online catalog was modified to show which books were at Glebe House and which were in St. Louis.

After relocating the lending collection, the Glebe House library was reorganized as the Member Resource Center, with refocused acquisition and service priorities. Because of space limitations, more emphasis was placed on acquiring materials in electronic form. For example, the society has begun to collect scanned Bible records and family papers. At the 2003 national conference NGS scanned materials submitted by attendees and returned the originals, along with a CD copy, to the owners. The society continues to scan similar records, and a significant collection is growing. Using reference and other materials at Glebe House, the Member Resource Center provides customized research assistance to members.

In 1985 NGS became the depository of application papers for the Society of the Descendants of the Illegitimate Sons and Daughters of the Kings of England. Bible records that had been submitted with membership applications to the National Society Sons and Daughters of the Pilgrims also became part of the NGS collection. A few years later NGS acquired the deceased physician card file of the American Medical Association.

Project Coordination

In 1990 a computerized clearinghouse, called the Genealogical Projects Registry, was established for the registration of genealogical projects. It included information about indexing, abstracting, and transcribing projects that were in progress, the kinds of help needed, and a notice when projects were completed. The purpose of the GPR database was to encourage project participation and avoid project duplication.\textsuperscript{86}

\textit{Research Trips}

Another program serving the national membership was inaugurated in 1998 in the form of research trips, led by knowledgeable NGS members acting as tour guides and teachers.\textsuperscript{87} A yearly trip to Salt Lake City was the first venture. Trips to Dublin, Germany (2001) followed.

\textbf{RECOGNITION PROGRAMS}

The society recognizes accomplishments and service of its members through a variety of awards, competitions, and other honors.\textsuperscript{88}

- \textit{Awards:}\textsuperscript{89} NGS bestows annual awards, with the NGS fellow its most prestigious designation. Since 1955 NGS has named fifty fellows for their outstanding work in the field of genealogy or for outstanding service to the society.\textsuperscript{90} Other awards include the Award of Merit, given for special contributions to the field over five years or more; the Distinguished Service Award, for dedication to the society; the Award of Distinction, for work on an NGS national conference; and the Certificate of Appreciation, for benefactors and long-term volunteers.

- \textit{Competitions.} Since 1982 the Family History Writing Contest has rewarded genealogists whose entries meet high standards of research, compilation, documentation, and writing.\textsuperscript{91} Three “Awards for Excellence,” given annually since 1991, recognize published works that foster scholarship and advance excellence in genealogy: the “Genealogy and Family History” award for exceptional family history books, the “Genealogical Methods and Sources” award for commendable publications about methodology or resources, and the “NGS Quarterly” award for exemplary articles published in the journal.\textsuperscript{92} The Newsletter Competition, begun in 1986, encourages genealogical and family organizations throughout the nation to produce high-quality newsletters.\textsuperscript{93}

- \textit{Hall of Fame:} The National Genealogy Hall of Fame was established in 1981 to honor men and women of the past who made significant contributions to the field of genealogy in the United States. Selection calls attention to the standards of excellence achieved by the honorees. Nomination is open to the entire genealogical community, with no membership requirement.\textsuperscript{94}

\textsuperscript{89} NGS award programs include recognition of local and national volunteers. For many years a Volunteer Appreciation Day was held at Glebe House to honor local volunteers. Other awards have traditionally been given at NGS conferences. Award recipients are also recognized in \textit{NewsMagazine} articles and photographs.

William Filby.\(^96\) The society oversees the selection and Scholarly Resources contributes the $1,000 yearly prize.\(^97\)

• Rubincam Youth Award: In 1986 NGS instituted the Rubincam Youth Award—named in honor of Milton Rubincam, one of the acclaimed twentieth-century leaders of genealogy and of NGS—to promote genealogical pursuit among those under twenty-five.\(^98\) Currently students from grades eight to twelve are eligible to receive this award given for the best-prepared genealogy.

OUTREACH

COMMUNICATIONS AND TECHNOLOGY

The Computer Interest Group (CIG), established in 1982, put NGS on the cutting edge of genealogical technology. The CIG provided a national forum for investigating, developing, and coordinating computer use to support genealogy. Monthly meetings in the Washington area began in 1985. To respond to nationwide interest, the group started a bimonthly publication, The NGS/CIG Digest. By the end of May 1986, six hundred members had joined the CIG and a year later that number had nearly doubled.\(^99\) At the 1987 NGS conference—and for several years following—the group sponsored a “computer learning center” featuring hands-on demonstrations and a surname exchange.\(^100\) As computer usage increased, the Digest was merged into the NGS Newsletter. After the donation of a twenty-four-hour-per-day bulletin board system, the CIG began a popular online bulletin board in 1986. After thirteen years it was discontinued, eclipsed by the Internet and the World Wide Web.\(^101\)

Headquarters operations gradually modernized, incorporating up-to-date communications, including an 800 number, and the use of computer technology to process credit cards.\(^102\) This was followed by numerous automation activities: networking the computers, installing high speed Internet access, using e-mail, and in 1988 launching an NGS Web site.\(^103\) Over the last decade the Web site has been enhanced, offering efficient electronic transactions, including conference registration and membership application and renewal, as well as delivering courses and other products. In 2003 NGS posted on its site vital record information from 1800 through 1850, first published in The National Intelligencer, a Washington, D.C., newspaper. The records were abstracted and indexed years ago by volunteers. Although the data has

\textbf{ADVOCACY}

NGS has played an important role in lobbying for causes important to the genealogical field. Highlights of actions in this realm include

- 1948 with the American Society of Genealogists, voiced concerns about the genealogical section of the Library of Congress to the Senate and House Library Committees;\textsuperscript{105}
- 1949 lobbied the Bureau of the Census and contacted genealogical and historical societies to request that certain questions be included in the 1950 census forms;\textsuperscript{106}
- 1963 appealed to governors not to close state libraries in Illinois, Ohio, and Indiana;\textsuperscript{107}
- 1965 worked with the Federal Trade Commission and the U.S. Post Office Department to prevent companies from selling coats of arms improperly;\textsuperscript{108}
- 1970 supported the Connecticut Society of Genealogists’ effort to keep public records open;\textsuperscript{109}
- 1973 issued a statement opposing the restriction of access by the public to federal censuses (House Bill 4426);\textsuperscript{110}
- 1984 supported House Bill 3987 to establish an independent National Archives;\textsuperscript{111}
- 1985 testified in a suit brought by the state of Wisconsin against a publisher of “family heritage books”;\textsuperscript{112}

• 1990 NGS president worked with the Working Group to Revise the Model State Vital Statistics Act and Regulations;\(^\text{113}\)
• 1997 participated in the Census Bureau’s National Conference on Census 2000 Partnerships and advised the programs division of the National Endowment for the Humanities.\(^\text{114}\)
The society’s Newsletter served as a vehicle to publicize and urge members’ action on these and other federal and state matters.

RELATIONSHIP WITH THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES
In keeping with its mission, NGS has for many years fostered a strong relationship with the National Archives and with the archivist of the United States.\(^\text{115}\)

• Since moving into Glebe House, NGS has hosted a reception for each new archivist.\(^\text{116}\)
• In 1982 when the National Archives and Records Service was threatened with budget cuts, the society’s president testified on behalf of the archives.\(^\text{117}\)
• NGS voiced public objection when the President of the United States, in 1983, considered replacing the archivist with a political appointee.\(^\text{118}\)
• In hearings to consider the separation of the National Archives and Records Administration from the General Services Administration, the society supported the separation.\(^\text{119}\)
• Since 1968 NGS representatives have served on the National Archives Advisory Council\(^\text{120}\) and attended meetings of the National Archives and Records Administration Strategic Planning Session.\(^\text{121}\)

FORGING PARTNERSHIPS IN THE GENEALOGICAL COMMUNITY
Alliances and mergers with like-minded organizations over the years have strengthened NGS and enhanced its position as a leader in the national genealogical community.

• In 1964 the society and the American Society of Genealogists\(^\text{122}\) together created the Board for Certification of Genealogists (BCG),\(^\text{123}\) an organization that administers 113 As an alternative to closing vital records, NGS recommended the issuance of marked uncertified copies of vital records to any person upon application. Such markings would prevent their misuse and could exclude confidential information. See “NGS Asks Greater Access to Vital Records,” NGS Newsletter 17 (1991): 8.

115 In 1983, Dr. Robert M. Warner, archivist of the United States, was the banquet speaker at the third NGS conference in Fort Worth, Texas. See “Archivist Addresses Conference,” National Genealogical Society Newsletter 9 (1983): 51. His speech emphasized the partnership and cooperation between the National Archives and the genealogical community based on their common interest in the preservation and availability of federal government records.

examinations and awards credentials to qualified genealogists. The first BCG governing board consisted of seventeen trustees, twelve of whom were current or former NGS officers or NGS Quarterly contributors.
• In 1981 when the thirty-year-old National Institute on Genealogical Research, held at the National Archives, was unable to continue as originally organized, NGS provided funding for the 1982 institute and became a member of its reorganized board. NGS has continued an active role in the institute’s governance.
• Also in 1981 the Association for Genealogical Education merged with NGS. In 1982, as the NGS Instructor Development Committee, it presented a seminar on education at Samford University’s Institute of Genealogy and Historical Research and another for the Indiana Historical Society. For several years afterwards the committee offered programs for genealogy teachers and later NGS incorporated its workshops into the annual conferences.
• In a similar move GENTECH merged with NGS in 2001, and the society continues to sponsor technology conferences under the GENTECH banner.

CONCLUSION

In 1957 the NGS archivist, Milton Rubincam, organized the society’s papers, many from the collection of John B. Nichols, M.D., who assembled the 50th anniversary history. Rubincam asked former presidents to deposit additional important papers. “I do not want it to be said in the year 2003—when none of us, certainly, expect to be around!—that we neglected the sources of our history during the second half-century of the society’s existence, as we did during the first half-century.” This brief account is submitted to update Nichol’s work and with the hope that it will facilitate the efforts of future NGS archivists.

The society’s first hundred years have produced both remarkable achievements and, as with all hundred-year-old organizations, missed opportunities. In the balance, the society has much to celebrate. Poised to enter its second century, the society echoes in its programs some of the motivations to organize in 1903: it is a leader in the fight to preserve public access to records; it produces and disseminates quality genealogical publications; it sustains an expanded and enhanced book loan program and other member services. NGS also blazed new trails, establishing itself over the years as a leader in genealogical education, with its conferences, seminars, courses, tours, and myriad educational opportunities. Woven through its history, one overarching accomplishment is its evolution from a small society on the banks of the Potomac to a truly national organization. Many challenges lie ahead, to be certain, but over the next hundred years the society will have a firm national base—in its organization and in its programs—on which to build and flourish.

In 1939 she was elected to honorary membership. Miss Norton was also active in the National Society Daughters of the American Revolution, the National Huguenot Society, and other patriotic organizations.¹³²

1913—1914: Mrs. Natalie Richmond Fernald (1866—1947) joined NGS in 1909 and served as the second NGSQ editor. She was the author of The Skinner Kinsmen: The Descendants of Thomas Skinner of Malden, Massachusetts and from 1901 to 1911 published The Genealogical Exchange. She was active in a number of organizations including the National Society Daughters of the American Revolution and the Petworth Woman's Club.¹³³

1914—1915: Daniel Smith Gordon (circa 1855/65—?), joined NGS in 1913 and, after serving as editor, went on to serve as the society's vice president in 1916 and councilor in 1917.¹³⁴ He was active in several lineage societies including the Order of Scions of Colonial Cavaliers 1640—1660. The Washington Chapter of the Order was chartered on 2 February 1915 with Daniel Smith Gordon as the presiding officer.¹³⁵ He served as deputy governor general of the national society when he resided in New York.¹³⁶

1915—1917: Frank Sylvester Parks¹³⁷ (1861—1937) after serving as NGSQ editor (1915—1917), served three terms as NGS president (1917—1918, 1920—1921, and 1923), in addition to councilor (1924—1925) and vice president (1927—1930). He authored several books and articles on the Park/Parke/Parkes surname.¹³⁸

1917—1943: Gaius Marcus Brumbaugh, M.D. (1862—1952) served the longest tenure as NGSQ editor. After becoming a member of the society in 1913, Dr. Brumbaugh served as a councilor (1916), editor (1917—1943), treasurer (1922—1923), and editor emeritus (1943—1952). Dr. Brumbaugh received his medical degree from Georgetown University, Washington, D.C., and was still in practice on his 80th birthday. He was honored as a fellow by the American Society of Genealogists in 1942 and elected an honorary NGS member in 1952. Dr. Brumbaugh authored a number of books including Genealogy of the Brumbach Families and two Maryland source books, Maryland

1943–1944: Jean Stephenson, LL.D (1892–1979) served four terms as an NGS councilor (1927–1928, 1937–1940, 1961–1964 and 1970–1972). Dr. Stephenson was also NGSQ assistant editor (1941–1943), editor (1943–1944), and herald (1969–1970). She was elected an NGS fellow in 1958 and was elected to the National Genealogy Hall of Fame in 1998. In addition to her work with the society, Dr. Stephenson was cofounder and president of the Board for Certification of Genealogists, codirector of the National Institute on Genealogical Research, and a founding instructor of Samford University’s Institute of Genealogy and Historical Research. Many years after being elected a fellow of the American Society of Genealogists in 1943, she served as that organization’s secretary (1961–1966). For numerous years Dr. Stephenson was an active member of the National Society Daughters of the American Revolution. Jean had attended graduate school at Cornell University before she moved to Washington in 1968. She received a doctorate in law from National University, was a publications editor for the Navy’s Bureau of Supplies and Accounts for nearly twenty-five years, and later was a Navy Department attorney.

1945–1957: Roberta P. Wakefield (1879–1957) prior to being NGSQ editor served as NGS recording secretary (1940–44). In 1957 she became the second elected fellow of the National Genealogical Society. Miss Wakefield was a professor of oratory in colleges in North Carolina, Alabama, and South Carolina. She moved to the District of Columbia in 1917 and was employed by the Department of Commerce where she was an authority on foreign tariffs and trade regulations. 344 Biographical Questionnaire filled out by Shirley Jean (Langdon) Wilcox, 15 July 2003.
This list includes the 1912 “State Presidents,” who seem to be similar to the previous state vice presidents. In 1914 there were no state [vice] presidents but for the first time there was an Organizer of Societies, Mrs. Leonara Caldwell Benson Hill. In 1917 and 1918 Mrs. Jno. S. Bukey was Organizer of Societies, and then the office disappeared. The office reappeared from 1922 to 1924 and was listed with the Corresponding Secretary. In 1925, the office was once again listed alone, with Charles Shepard, 2d as the officer. After that the office ceased to exist. From 1912 to 1970 there were three vice presidents; the number was reduced to two in 1970 and to one in 1998.
